Artist Nina Mae Fowler announces a major new project 'Cinema Portraits' inviting new portrait commissions from those with an interest in film and portraiture.

Fowler's work investigates fame, desire and our relationship with cinema epitomised by her major commission by the National Portrait Gallery to produce a series of 'Luminary Drawings', portrait drawings in pencil and charcoal of nine of the UK's leading film directors watching a film of importance to them. Individuals selected for this project include Ridley Scott, Sally Potter, Sam Mendes, Ken Loach and Amma Asante MBE and their portraits now hang in the National Portrait Gallery.

This new 'Cinema Portraits' series extends the original project more widely to individuals with a desire to own a portrait of themselves or a family member, who may be new to the commissioning process. Actor Jude Law and comedian Lee Mack with his daughter have shown their support by sitting in order to help promote the project. More are set to follow including actress Sienna Miller, publisher and fashion designer Caroline Issa and playwright Polly Stenham.

Everyman is generously offering their cinemas to be used for private client sittings to support the project. Alternatively, Fowler can set up a cinema environment in her studio or the sitter's home. The aim is to ensure each individual is lit with the luminance of the screen, watching a film of their choice whilst Nina takes stills and makes preliminary sketches that form the basis of the final pencil and charcoal drawing. 20% of the £5,000 portrait fee will be donated to Baroness Helena Kennedy's Urgent Afghanistan Appeal and the East Anglian Children's Hospices (EACH). A limited-edition print of Fowler's Jude Law drawing, priced at £120, is proving popular already and for each sale of the print, 50% of the proceeds are being donated to the chosen charities.

"Nina Mae Fowler is not only an artist of great talent, whose humanity is present in all her work, she has been a lifeline for many of the women we evacuate from Afghanistan who are on Taliban 'kill list' – Helping us raise money to support safe houses and flights, she and those who commission these portraits have been a blessing. TESTIMONIALS

Jude Law on his cinema portrait

"Nina has created a perfect situation in which one can lose oneself in a favourite film and therefore become an open, engaged and yet relaxed subject. As someone who works in the medium of film it felt like a perfect triangulation for connection. Nina watching me watch a film."

Jessica Purefoy on child cinema portrait commission

"This new body of work by Nina captures moments of awestruck wonder, by recording these fleeting moments, she forever captures a fundamental euphoria, first experienced as a child, but never quite lost as an adult."

Ridley Scott on 'Luminary Drawings'

"I was not keen on sitting for a portrait because I dislike being photographed intensely. But Nina persevered and is a hard one to turn down. She sent me a book on her work, and I was blown away. She explained her technique and how she worked to enable people to sit still for the session. In my case, she wanted me to watch the first film I ever saw. I think it worked out."
